Discrimination against Women: After Marriage

- Under the existing cultural and social ethos of India a married girl / woman is no longer considered to be part of the family of her birth, instead she has become part of the family of the groom.
- There is no cultural or religious tradition behind one of the most ghastly incidents of female oppression, but the prevalence of the dowry tradition has supposedly lead to "Bride Burning" (or other form of murdering) of the newly-wed wife by the husband and his family.

Indian law demands a formal criminal investigation when a newly married woman dies within the home within 7 years of marriage.

According to Indian National Crime Record Bureau, there were 8,239 dowry death cases, 1,285 cases of attempted dowry deaths, and another 90 cases with pending investigations.

Imbalance

- On the other hand, there are a couple of reasons why women might be regarded more of a liability for a family:
- Not considered capable of earning money
- Seen as economically and emotionally dependent on men
- While they help with domestic duties during childhood and adolescence, they go to live with their husband's family after marriage, which means less help in the household of their originating family, and most importantly loss of money due to the dowry tradition.
- This might explain why the birth of a daughter may not always be perceived as equally blissful as the birth of a son, and why "May you be blessed with a hundred sons" is a common Hindu wedding blessing.
